Shenyang, or “Shen” in abbreviation, formerly known by its Manchu name Mukden or Fengtian, is the provincial capital and the largest city of Liaoning Province, People’s Republic of China. It has an area of 129,000 km², a registered population of over 8.2 million, and an urbanisation rate of 80.55%. Shenyang is the only mega city in Bohai Sea bay area and in North-eastern China.

Shenyang is located in the geographical centre of north-eastern China and in the middle of Liaoning Province. It is the transportation hub to north-eastern area from Yangtze River Delta Economic Zone, Pearl River Delta Economic Zone, and Jingjinji Metropolitan Region. Also, Shenyang is on the strategic position of the “the Belt and Road” extending to north-eastern and south-eastern Asia.

Shenyang is a national history and culture centre and is recognised as one of the origins of the old Chinese civilisation. It has over 2000 years’ history from its establishment in the “warring states period”. At a later time, Hong Taiji started his reign of Qing Dynasty here. Shenyang is therefore called “the origin of a dynasty and the capital city of two emperors.” Today, there are still many valuable historical sites remaining in the city.
